Pedagogized Muslimness

Religion and Culture as Identity Politics in the Classroom

Buchardt, Mette

Publication date:
2014

Document Version
Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Link to publication from Aalborg University

Citation for published version (APA):
Contents

Acknowledgements ........................................................................................................8

PART 1
STUDYING THE CURRICULUM
OF ‘RELIGION’ AS SOCIAL PRACTICE .................................................................9

1. Prologue: The desire for knowledge of ‘the Muslim pupil’:
a problematization of a problematization ...............................................................9

1.1 Gülsen in the mosque and the church.
The knowledge desire of the researcher .................................................................11
1.2 September 12: Monoculturalism, multiculturalism, and anti-racism in education? ...........................................................................................................14
1.3 The main questions, the object, the data ........................................................16
1.4 From dissertation to book – from Danish into English: Studies of Danish schooling in an international context ....................................................................17
1.5 The structure of the book ................................................................................19

2. The approach to curriculum, knowledge, and the classroom .........................21

2.1 The understanding of curriculum in relation to research on education ..........21
2.2 Recontextualizing, pedagogizing, and the pedagogic device .........................23
Model I ..................................................................................................................25
2.3 Forms of curricular knowledge conceptualized sociologically and social-epistemologically .......................................................................................26 2.4 Top-down or micro-politics? Locating curriculum through the concept of recontextualizing ........................................................................28
2.5 Recontextualizing knowledge about ‘religion,’ ‘culture,’ and ‘identity’– an initial localization as a framework for asking questions in the classroom ..........30
2.6 The emergence of ‘the immigrant pupil’ .........................................................32
2.7 Research on religion in schools and its impact on this study .......................34
2.8 ‘Religion’/‘culture’ as knowledge and identity politics .....................................36

3. Conceptual architecture: recontextualizing and the pedagogic field of practice studied as discursive regularity and social economy ......................38

3.1 Operationalizing the Bernsteinian understanding of field and discourse ...............................................................................................38
Model II .............................................................................................................39
3.2 Pedagogic discourse and discursive regularity ..........................................40
3.3 The grammar of the classroom: language as social practice ....................42
3.4 Classroom as social space: positioning and dispositions of the agents ..........44
3.5 Forms of capital: The economy of the symbolic – the symbolism of economy ...........................................................................45
3.6 Conceptualizing the classroom: social classification and knowledge ..........47

4. Two classrooms in the socioeconomic landscape. Constructing the empirical material .......................................................................................48

4.1 Constructing the data – constructing the classroom ....................................48
4.2 The official text of the classroom ..................................................................55
4.3 The detailed focal points in analyzing classroom conversation .......................58
4.4 Practices of the turn-taking system..................................................................63
4.5 The socioeconomic backgrounds of the pupils: teacher, pupil, and parent descriptions and information..........................................................64
4.6 Between and across the analysis of dispositions, positions, and positioning and the analysis of knowledge- and subject production.................................65

PART 2
DIFFERENTIATED ‘MUSLIM’ CLASS STRUCTURE .........................68
5. The teacher articulation of the official classroom text ..................................69
5.1 A differentiated ideal of respect.......................................................................69
5.2 ‘The Muslim pupil’ as a structuring figure.......................................................71
5.3 Separate and stable, yet flexibly changeable....................................................72
6. Muslimness as differentiated school capital...................................................74
6.1 Culture as religion, religion as culture in the teacher’s characterizations .......75
6.2 To be or not to be legitimate, to be or not to be ‘subject matter-relevant’ .....84
6.3 Those in whom one can invest expectations.....................................................87
6.4 Summing up: the socioeconomic landscape................................................92
7. Production of ‘the Muslim subjects’ ...............................................................95
7.1 Situating the text sample: educational module and lesson..............................96
7.2 Ritual as the structuring theme – Sulayman as the content..............................99
7.3 Intimacy and distance.....................................................................................102
7.4 Modality at work............................................................................................103
7.5 Summing up: the Muslim subjects..................................................................106
8. Intimization and flexibilization of acknowledged ‘Muslimness’.................108
8.1 Social classification: recognition of dispositions and position....................108
8.2 Pupils in the game of knowledge and experience........................................110
8.3 Categories of knowledge, production of subjects.........................................110

PART 3
SUBJECTIVITY WITHIN THE PERIMETER OF ‘MUSLIM TRADITION’: MUSLIM AS ‘LOW CLASS’.................................112
9. The school and the teachers’ articulation of curriculum.................................113
9.1 The educational module and the teacher speech about curriculum.................114
9.2 Muslims and Christians: experience knowledge and factual knowledge........116
10. ‘Christianity’ as ‘universal human conditions’ versus the predictable ‘Muslim tradition’ ...........................................................................................................119
10.1 The universal human funeral: organization of ‘Christianity’ and ‘funeral’ ....120
10.2 The ‘Muslim’ tradition: organizing ‘Islam’ and ‘funeral’.................................127
10.3 Producing subjects, generating pupil experience.........................................136
10.4 Summing up: constructing the objects Christianity and Islam......................139
11. The hierarchy of problematization: teachers’ interest and teachers’ concern......................................................................................................................143
11.1 The empirical material....................................................................................143
11.2 Gülsen and Amalie: “A kind of girl that … lacks some social filters” and “The most social and diplomatic child”.................................................146 11.3 The girl group hierarchy: the academics’ daughter, a girl who thinks she’s clever, and one who’s out of proportion .................................151 11.4 Those that bring bad influences from other institutions and those that bring it from home.............................................................................154
11.5 The categorization practices of the teachers in descriptions of pupils ........158
11.6 Summing up: pupil disposition and -positioning, teacher recognition and the opposite......................................................................162

12. Assembling knowledge production and social classification ...............165
   12.1 Speech about types of pupils and forms of knowledge .......................166
   12.2 Remaining an under-achiever; winning a space, but not legitimacy ......167
   12.3 Knowledge and speakers in an agent-, practice-, and capital perspective 168

PART 4
RELIGION AND CULTURE AS KNOWLEDGE AND SOCIAL CLASSIFICATION.......................................................................................172
13. Pedagogizing religion. Concluding remarks ...........................................172
   13.1 Religion as race and class.....................................................................172
   13.2 Religion as ‘experience knowledge’......................................................174
   13.3 The differentiated Muslim class structure at the
       B-school: the Muslim subjects .............................................................175
   13.4 Subjectivity within the perimeter of ‘Muslim tradition.’ The Muslim underclass at the C-schools highly differentiated class structure ...........177 13.5 Recapitulation: production of knowledge and production of social classification as interlinked.................................................................178
   13.6 The school’s production and classification of knowledge and bodies.
       ‘Muslimness’ and ‘universal Danish Christianity’ pedagogized ..........179

References .....................................................................................................181

Legislation and other documents .................................................................191

Appendix A: The B-school, selected text sample. Original Danish version ....193
Appendix B: The C-school, selected text samples, original Danish version ....195
   Text sample 1 (TRT1-6)............................................................................195
   Text sample 2 (TRT1-6)............................................................................196
   Text sample 3 .........................................................................................197