Welcome note

Dear colleagues,

We are honoured and pleased to host the 17th ESPAnet conference at the campus of Stockholm University. The conference theme 'Social citizenship, migration and conflict: equality and opportunity in the European welfare states' is chosen with great care. Each year, around 11 million EU citizens of working age migrate within Europe. In relation to political unrest, conflicts around the globe, as well as economic inequality, refugee migration into Europe has increased substantially, bringing the Dublin asylum regulations to a breaking point. Cross-border labour mobility and refugee migration challenge us to reconsider how to organize the welfare state. Are the European countries prepared to adjust their social security system? Will the responses be adequate and sustainable?

Academic research has an important task in addressing the grand challenges of our time, develop new perspectives, and ask questions of paramount interest also for the public debate and in politics. We hope that the 17th annual ESPAnet conference in Stockholm will raise an interest to bridge research on migration, social protection, and equality, thus creating a solid evidence-base to enlighten policymaking.

Despite our long tradition of social policy research, this is the first time the ESPAnet conference comes to Sweden. We are grateful to the ESPAnet board for providing us the opportunity to host this important event. The conference will bring together over 300 academics from various disciplines all over Europe, and we hope that it will join the long list of past successful social policy events organized by ESPAnet.

We wish you an interesting and inspiring conference, and a wonderful stay in Stockholm.

Kenneth Nelson and Rense Nieuwenhuis

(on behalf of the local organizing committee)

Local organizing committee

Ann-Zofie Duvander, Stockholm University

Marie Evertsson, Stockholm University

Johan Fritzell, Karolinska institutet

Tomas Korpi, Stockholm University

Kenneth Nelson, Stockholm University

Rense Nieuwenhuis, Stockholm University

Joakim Palme, Uppsala University

Administrative support

The local organizing committee has received substantial administrative support from the Swedish Institute for Social Research (SOFI), as well as from the ESPAnet board. We also thank the stream conveners for helping us review and select papers for presentation at the conference.

At SOFI, we particularly would like to express our gratitude to Sofie Burman, Laure Doctrinal, Mari Eneroth, Stefan Englund, Daniel Fredriksson, and Tara Nabavi. We also thank all the volunteers.

We have received great assistance from the Conference Service at Stockholm University.

Funding

The conference has received generous financial support from the Swedish Research Council and the Swedish Research Council for Health, Working Life and Welfare. We are also thankful to SOFI, for both direct and indirect funding.

Contact

Conference organizers can be reached at info@espanet2019.se. In case of emergency, dial 112.

The Swedish Institute for Social Research (SOFI)

The 17th ESPAnet Annual Conference is organized by The Swedish Institute for Social Research at Stockholm University. SOFI was founded in the early 1970s as an independent entity, and was thereafter incorporated into Stockholm University in the early 1980s. SOFI was merged into the Faculty of Social Sciences in the mid-1990s.

SOFI has grown steadily over the years, from around 20 employees in the early 1970s to around 90 employees today. The research at SOFI is organized in three units: labor economics, social stratification and social policy. PhD candidates at SOFI are enrolled in the PhD programs at the Departments of Economics and Sociology.

More than half of our research activities are funded by external sources, primarily the national research councils. For many years, much of the research at SOFI has been based on large databases, which the researchers themselves have established. Internationally, perhaps the most well-known infrastructure resource is the Social Policy Indicators Database.

Conference venue

Aula Magna is beautifully situated on the Stockholm University campus, right between the subway station and Södra huset (the tall blue buildings on the campus).

In December each year, the official Nobel Prize lectures arranged by the Royal Swedish Academy of Science are held in Aula Magna's main auditorium. We use the same auditorium for the ESPAnet keynotes.

Aula Magna is the largest auditorium at Stockholm University, completed in 1998. The building was designed by architect Ralph Erskine, who wanted the auditorium to resemble the semi-circular plan of an ancient amphitheatre. In principle, the audience of close to 1200 people should be able to hear the speaker without electronic amplification.

Directions to Aula Magna from the subway

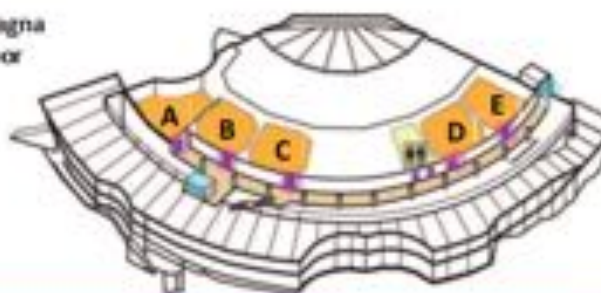

There is only one exit from the subway station Universitetet. Walk up the stairs in front of the subway station and continue straight ahead, keeping to the path that verges slightly to the right (don't make a sharp right). Continue along the pathway for about 200 meters, and Aula Magna will appear on your right-hand side.

The D-, E- and F-buildings

Some of the parallel paper sessions take place in the D-, E- and F-buildings outside Aula Magna (named Södra huset on the map above). Södra huset contains six tall semi-detached buildings, named A-F. They are easily spotted by their large blue shape and the big letter above each entrance.

The D-, E- and F-buildings are located just a two-minute walk from Aula Magna.

Signs are displayed to help you find your way, and there is also an information booth on the 3th floor of the E-building.

Rooms are labelled by floor number, and further down the corridor of each building, there is an elevator.

Reception at the City Hall

During the first evening of the Conference (Thursday 5th August), there is a reception at the Stockholm City Hall. The reception starts at 19.00, and will continue for about two hours.

It is important that you show up on time, as there will be a guided tour of the City Hall, including a walk through Blå hallen, where the Nobel Prize banquet is held each year.

Please note that only those who registered for the reception will be allowed to enter.

If you registered for the reception, you should have received an invitation card in your conference pack.

This card is not your entry ticket. It simply indicates that you registered for the reception and will be allowed to enter the City Hall.

We are grateful if all those who registered attend the reception, as we otherwise may have to compensate the City Hall financially.

The address of the City Hall is Hantverkargatan 1, Stockholm.

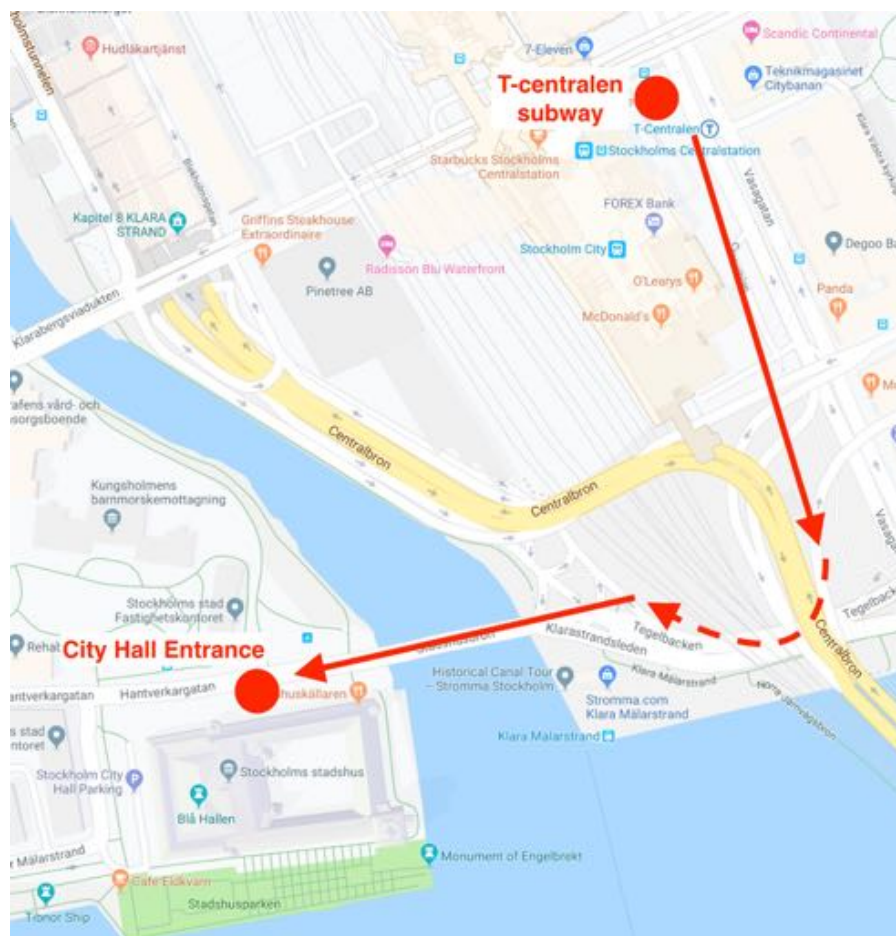

Directions to the City Hall

The subway is the easiest way to reach the City Hall from Stockholm University. To access the subway, you can either buy a SL card at the shop called Pressbyrå (at the entrance of the subway station), or you can buy a single ticket in the machine or at the ticket office in the station. A single ticket is 45 SEK, approx. 4.5 EUR.

It is a ten-minute ride on the subway from Universitetet to T-centralen, where you get off. From there, there is a 15-minute walk to the City Hall.

Exit the platform at T-centralen in the direction of Vasagatan (in the direction of the train). Go up the escalator, through the turnstiles, and past the shop Pressbyrån. You walk through a tunnel. Directly before the glass doors, take the stairs on your left that lead you outside.

Walk straight ahead, crossing a road, towards the water. Turn right to go underneath the overpass. After the overpass, you see the city hall in front of you.

Keynotes

Mass migration and generous welfare states. Compatible or incompatible?

Friday, 6 September, 11.30-13.00, Aula Magna – Auditorium

Christian Albrekt Larsen – Professor in the Department of Political Science at Aalborg University, Denmark – has specialized in the question of how to build social coherent societies in open economies and multicultural settings.

In his talk, Christian will address the pivotal role of welfare states for securing the wellbeing of citizens. Especially, the Nordic countries became prime examples of how to successfully build well-functioning welfare societies. However, these institutional arrangements from the 19th and 20th century are faced with a new environment of increased levels of migration. This has raised a concern about the presence of a potential progressive dilemma.

The argument is that progressive political forces face a trade-off between building/maintaining a generous welfare state and welcoming migrants. The lecture revises the theoretical arguments and uses examples from Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, and Germany to demonstrate how contemporary political agents attempt to mitigate the potential trade-offs.

The underlying normative concern is not only how to secure thriving Northern European host-countries. The broader normative concern is how, in general, to build and maintain well-functioning societies in a more ethnically diverse and globalized world.

Connecting migration and social policy: a multi-scalar intersectional approach

Friday, 6 September, 17.00-18.30, Aula Magna – Auditorium

Fiona Williams – Emeritus Professor in the School of Sociology and Social Policy at the University of Leeds, United Kingdom – has vast experience of research on gender, race, and ethnicity in social policy.

The aim of Fiona's talk is to offer ways of conceptualising and framing the multi-faceted relationship between cross-border migration and social policy.

The rise of ethno-nationalism, welfare chauvinism, and the divisive contestations around these profoundly challenge the mainstream of welfare state analysis as it has developed over the past three decades. At the same time, new approaches that position migration as a central dimension of social inequalities and social justice are emerging.

My talk will illustrate this by looking at migrant care work to which it applies a synthesis of an intersectional with a critical social policy perspective. This analyses intersections within and across different scales – from the transnational, the national, the local and interpersonal, and it nests them within the intersections of four global crises – finance, care, migration, and the environment.

Welfare attitudes in diverse societies: Reflections on the diversity-welfare problematic, with empirical illustrations

Saturday, 7 September, 10.30-12.00, Aula Magna – Auditorium

Wim van Oorschot – Professor in the Centre for Sociological Research, Faculty of Social Sciences at KU Leuven, Belgium – has published widely on non-take-up, equity in social protection, social capital, and solidarity in the European welfare states.

Wim will critically discuss American warnings of growing diversity, and reflect upon the character of the diversity-welfare problematic in Europe, with empirical illustrations based on EU-comparative data on migrants-related welfare attitudes.

From a global perspective, European countries have comprehensive welfare states. Because of globalisation processes populations of European welfare states become more 'diverse'.

American scholars warned that this growing diversity could threaten the European welfare states. This warning has led to a diversity-welfare debate in which diversity is seen as problematic in relation to the economic sustainability and social legitimacy of welfare provision.
