SkrivChairman and Board Member 2011-2013, I was chairman of Industrial Design core-group (a group, which includes all teachers and researchers in the Industrial Design section). I have been responsible for the monthly meetings, the allocation of teaching resources in the Industrial Design section, and the group's contact to the head of department and chairman of the Study Board. Since 2011, I have been member of the study board for the Architecture and Design study programs and part of the 'internal development team', which focusses on the technical progression in the Industrial Design study program. dit svar her...

Ph.D thesis and Master's Thesis Part of the empirical data for my Ph.D. dissertation was collected from a master's thesis project. The master's thesis students collaborated with The Red Cross on a Concept Design project, and in order to initiate this collaboration, a colleague and I offered to facilitate a Lego Serious Play workshop. The workshop became part of my Ph.D data set, but it also helped the students to narrow their project and identify a framing of their thesis. DesignMatch (1st and 3rd semester, master minor project) In the DesignMatch workshop, I collaborated with researchers from the Ludinno project (Ludinno - Learning labs for User-Driven Innovation) and used their methodology as a basis for the students' approach in the workshop. It provided the students with the latest methodologies within user-driven design and the researchers with test-data on their methodology. 1st semester, master course: Designing the Value In fall 2011, I used the course: Designing the Value as test-lab for some of my own research on opportunity design and one of my colleague's research on the value- and vision based methodology. It provided the students with a number of methods and perspectives to use in their course module projects. Workshop with master-students and supervisors In spring 2012, I held a Lego Serious Play on the balance between project supervision and learning facilitation. The workshop included both master's students and supervisors from the Industrial Design section. The workshop facilitated both meta-reflections for students as well as the supervisors. The students' reflections focused mainly on their own learning process and role in group work. The supervisors' reflection focused mainly on their limits and possibilities in the interaction with the students. The workshop also became data for the paper: Balancing Design Project Supervision and Learning Facilitation (2012).
